

By Carl Collen

Friday 7th April 2017, 9:28 GMT

One Banana helps Peruvian families

CSR-led banana operation is helping those families affected by the recent floods in Peru

One Banana has moved quickly to aid families in the Peruvian region of Piura, which has been badly hit by torrential rains and massive flooding for much of this year, affecting over 90,000 people.

Heavy rain began to fall on 30 January in the northern region, and since then more than 2,500 people have been displaced, with over 500 homes destroyed.

One Banana has operations in Piura where it is estimated that 30 per cent of the local organic banana production has been damaged.

These heavy rains, powered by El Niño conditions, have drenched parts of Peru with ten times more rainfall than normal, causing rivers to overflow and mudslides to destroy roads and farms. Fortunately, One Banana's organic operation in the area has been largely unaffected at this time.

In a bid to help, One Banana recently donated organic bananas to local refuge centers directly benefitting over 700 families. Over the coming days, One Banana will continue efforts to bring more bananas to donate and help other affected families in the Piura region, while also helping to restore local schools or rebuild other local growers.

"It is very painful for us to see families from towns in the same region who have lost everything and have had to go to refuge centers. That is why we are helping to alleviate some of their hunger and pain," stated Rob Adams, One Banana sales and marketing president. "Our care for the communities where we do business is one more way that One Banana Makes a Difference."