With consumers placing new demands on retailers across Europe and beyond to improve their offer and present it through new and more innovative channels, understanding and keeping track of the market has arguably never been more important.

To make sense of the latest trends, Fruitnet Forum South-East Europe this year welcomes Francisco Borrás, consultant and former commercial director of Anecoop, to deliver the event's keynote presentation.

He will explain how the fresh produce business is under increasing pressure – particularly from a supermarket sector being pulled in different directions by discounting and online retailing – to deliver greater value in terms of quality, taste, convenience, organics and so on.

Drawing on decades of experience working in the international fruit and vegetable trade, he will also point to new opportunities for suppliers in the south-east Europe region.

Elsewhere on the programme, the event looks more closely at how suppliers and marketers can boost demand by providing better products, and show how they are managing to meet those increasingly demanding customer requirements.

Taking part in this year's event will be: Marko Begenišić of topfruit and table grape company Popovo Polje in Bosnia & Herzegovina; Gojko Zagorac, director of development at Serbian apple grower-exporter Verda Vivo; and Nemanja Ćurguz, head of sales at another leading Serbian apple supplier, Al Dahra Rudnap.

Also joining the programme will be Hugo Vermeulen, managing director of leading Dutch importer-exporter Cool Fresh International, who will offer his own take on how the European market for fresh produce is changing, plus speak more generally about some of the opportunities he sees for the fruit and vegetable business to grow in south-east Europe.
